JUDGE QUIGLEY REOPENS REBERSBURG HOTEL CASE

Claims Power to Review Refusal of License by Orvis.

MAY FILE AN APPEAL

Friends of Clarence Long Seem Very Confident Quigley Will Grant License that Orvis Turned Down—Case Likely to Reach Superior Court.

Judge Quigley last Friday filed an opinion and decree reopening the Rebersburg hotel license case and friends of Clarence Long, proprietor of the hotel, are confident that in a short time he will be granted a license for the year beginning April 1st. Long's application for a renewal of his license was turned down by Judge Orvis shortly before the latter retired from the bench. In the recent judicial campaign Long figured in sensational affidavits regarding alleged assessments of campaign funds among hotel keepers.

In his opinion Judge Quigley claims the power to review the discretion of his predecessor and accordingly ordered a further hearing in the matter at a time to be designated by the Court. Counsel for the remonstrants in an answer filed to Long's petition to have his case reopened, asserted that the action of Judge Orvis was final and therefore could not be reviewed by his successor, Judge Quigley. It is generally believed that the case will be appealed to the Superior Court. Judge Quigley's opinion and decree follows:—

"The petitioner who was refused a retail liquor license for the year beginning April 1, 1916, by my predecessor, complains that he was not given an opportunity to be fully heard; that on account of illness and limited time he was prevented from producing the testimony of a large number of witnesses deemed by him necessary to combat charges by remonstrants concerning his moral character, fitness to conduct a hotel and necessity for same.

"The answer denies the right of this Court to re-open this matter and states specifically that from the testimony taken at the time it was demonstrated that the applicant was not a fit person to be entrusted with a license, nor was the hotel a necessity, and avers that the Judge hearing the application having found these facts could not be reviewed by the Appellate Court and therefore cannot be reviewed by his successor in office; that the present Judge, who was not present, did not have an opportunity to see the witnesses face to face, to observe their manner, determine their credibility, etc., etc., is not in a position to determine whether the Judge who did hear and see them erred in refusing this license.

"As we view it the only questions involved are, first, whether the petitioner was fully heard, and second, whether, on account of length of time intervening between the disposal of the application and the presentation of the petition, the petitioner is barred from a further hearing.

"From the petition and answer we find on the one hand the affidavit of the petitioner that by reason of his illness and limited time it was impossible for him to produce a large number of his witnesses On the other hand, the parties to the answer do not dispute this in so many words but state that the testimony was marked closed December 29th, 1915, as shown by the short-hand notes of the Official Assistant Court Stenographer. Upon what they base these statements we do not know because the testimony taken at the time of the hearing is not of record and therefore not available for the enlightenment of the Court at this time.

"The argument used in the answer that under the rules of court the applicant could have taken out a rule to have his testimony taken preceding the hearing on the application is not effective, as it is a well known fact that working under these same rules the Court has never heretofore required the taking of testimony either of the applicant or remonstrants prior to the day fixed for hearing; on the contrary such testimony was always taken at a later date.

"Our authority to interfere is questioned on the theory that the decree entered by my predecessor is final on the ground that no move was made within four days as required in motions for a new trial in civil cases. It has been held that cases of this kind do not come under the head of common law judgments or decrees, but that the mode of procedure is similar to that followed in courts of equity and the Orphans. RECEIVES WORD TO PUT TROOP L IN READINESS

Bellefonte Cavalrymen May See Service in Mexico.

LOOKING FOR HORSES

Captain Curtin Advised to Recruit Troop to Full Streugth and Have His Command Ready to Entrain Quickly if Necessary.

In response to a suggestion from the Department of the Adjutant General, at Harrisburg, Troop L, stationed at Bellefonte, is being placed in readiness to respond quickly should there be a formal call for service on the Mexican border. Complying with instructions received on Saturday of last week, Captain H. Laird Curtin, commanding Troop L, has made a complete inventory of equipment on hand, has filed requisitions for such additional articles as are needed, and is also looking about for horses for his men.

Thus far no formal order looking to placing Troop L in active service has been received by Captain Curtin. The letter received by him was similar to one sent to all cavalry commanders in the State. The purpose, from what may be learned, is to have each troop recruited up and fully equipped so that should orders for Mexico be received Troop L may entrain on a few hours' notice.

The equipment of a cavalry man consists of everything necessary to the life of a camper. Each man is furnished a saddle, bridle and blanket, gun boot, saddlebag in which is a curry comb and brush on one side and eating utensils and a compartment for cooked rations on the other side; a personal blanket roll, a half shelter tent, 30 caliber carbine, 45 caliber revolver, slicker or poncho, 100 rounds of ammunition for carbine, 100 rounds of ammunition for revolver, one saber, one canteen, two extra horseshoes, 25 horseshoes nails, one nose bag, one feed of grain weighing four pounds, one kit bag, one picket line (rope for picketing horse), and the smallest amount of personal garments possible, such as one extra suit of underwear, two pairs of socks, and shoes, two handkerchiefs, small comb and brush, toothbrush, one towel, one piece of soap. The uniform consists of woolen trousers and shirt to match, leggins, campaign hat, field shoes and gauntlets with field belt and spurs.

The average weight of a cavalryman is 160 pounds and the maximum weight 180 pounds. The horse is compelled to carry the cavalryman plus the equipment, which weighs 40 pounds. The troop, which is to be recruited up to its fighting strength within the next few days, will number 86 men and three officers.

Surprise Party at Hannah.

J. T. Beckwith's fortieth birthday anniversary fell on Monday, March 27th, and about 75 friends, young and old, gathered at his home at Hannah and helped him enjoy it. The affair was planned as a surprise, and all present had a most enjoyable time.

Clearfield Lawyer Explains Why He Renounces Democratic Party.

Fred G. Betts, a prominent lawyer of Clearfield, and life-long Democrat, last week publicly renounced allegiance to the Democratic party, declared himself affiliated with the Republican party because the latter party has a constructive policy, gives to business what is justly due, stands for the interest of the wage earner and also that upholds the honor of the flag. Moreover, Mr. Betts expressed the belief that President Wilson's administration and the Democratic party "are groping in the dark" and unless they "soon find themselves" thousands of other Democrats will go over into the Republican ranks. In a statement issued by Mr. Betts he, among other things, says:—

To my friends, who have asked me why I have registered with the Republican party, an explanation, perhaps, is necessary.

Had I not, ever since becoming a voter, taken some part, more or less active, in Democratic politics, my decision now would cause no comment. Since 1892 I have voted for every Democratic candidate for President, casting six votes in all, and one-half of these for Bryan.

In 1896 the Democratic party discovered Bryan—a Moses, but with the voice of Aaron, to lead it out of the wilderness. The leadership has not lasted forty years, but the party is still floundering in a wilderness of doubt and uncertainty. The party today would be in fitter form if this Moses had never emerged from the bull-rushes. The leader the party created has proven to be a Frankenstein—a destroyer of old Democratic doctrine.

Democratic newspapers that are today rapping Bryan, are the same that a year ago were ready to drive out of the party any one who raised his voice against him.

There has been no change in Bryan. The same man went out of the Cabinet that went into it, older, but no wiser. The same lips that uttered "peace at any price," and advised that our "swords should be beaten into plough-shares," uttered with silver tongue the catching phrase, "you shall not crucify mankind upon a cross of gold." It was the same Bryan who left his duties at Washington to lecture under a Chautauqua tent, that made possible Wilson's nomination at Baltimore. Bryanism instead of being a boon to the Democratic party has been a colossal blunder. The temperature of my admiration for Woodrow fell from fever heat to the freezing point when he appointed Bryan to the chief place in his Cabinet, to pay a political debt.

Bryan has been weighed in the balance and found wanting.

But you may ask, why leave the party because of Bryan, he is dead politically? Bryan did not resign and step out of the Cabinet,

"Like one that wraps the drapery of his couch
About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams."

He still wanders about in a loquacious nightmare.

Unless I err in judgment, he controls a large portion of Congress.

Unless I err in prophecy, his hand will pen a great part of the Democratic platform at St. Louis.

The impress of his policies and false doctrine sets heavily on the party. As the fluid from the cuttle fish darkens the water of its haunts, so the Bryan propaganda has tinctured the clear vision of the party to such an extent that it is now groping in the dark.

In 1912 the Democratic party came into full power. Wilson, an able man—a man of the highest integrity, was elected President, and had behind him a Democratic Senate and House. The Democratic principles went into effect. An income tax was levied upon a portion of the people. The tariff was reduced. Anti-trust legislation, a certain kind, was enacted.

I have the highest regard for Woodrow Wilson. No President since Lincoln, has had to cope with such serious questions. All honor to him for having kept us, thus far, from being swept into the maelstrom of war. He has, no doubt, a purpose, but he has no plan.

Notwithstanding my admiration and great respect for our sorely tried President, I disagree with many of his policies.

What of his Cabinet? It is weak in spots. I leave it to each individual to number the spots. Grape juice is all right, but even the Prohibitionist ought not to object to mixing a little ginger with it—just occasionally.

We are trusting to an inefficient army and navy.

It is a debatable question whether this country would now be so near a possible war, if a strong policy had been followed by the State Department with foreign countries. The Venezuela policy of Cleveland would have been respected.

I do not believe our diplomatic policies should be conducted on the plan of a correspondence school,—sending the papers back to be corrected. The President's single track mind has many a siding on which to switch to allow another German note go by.

Roosevelt has characterized our foreign policy as a Micawber, one, because it consists of notes and renewal notes. Micawber however, was a waiter, always waiting for something to turn up. Is not the "watchful waiting" policy in regard to Mexico a Micawber policy? What has been gained by it? We sent a force to Vera Cruz, and asked to have the flag saluted, and the only salute to the flag has been to sprinkle it with blood of United States soldiers

It was not until Roosevelt sounded the keynote of preparedness that President Wilson came out for it, finding that is was popular.

It has been demonstrated to me that a policy of tariff for revenue only, does not meet the necessities of our country. The Democratic party today is confronted with the fact that more revenue must be obtained. Preparedness cannot be carried into effect without ample revenue. The Underwood tariff has not cheapened to the consumer one single article. It has not decreased the cost of living.

The Democratic party of today is not the party of Jefferson, of Tilden, of Cleveland, of our fathers. The infection of Bryanism has become a festering sore on the party.

If it were not for the world war the business of the United States would not even be at a standstill, it would be receding.

Living in Pennsylvania, it is to my interest and to the interest of the labor I employ to support a policy that stands for the protection of industries and the protection of labor.

I forsake a party that seems to have no definite, fixed foreign policy; a party that is content to wait to see what may turn up, when the whole world is turned up-side down; a party that enacts tariff legislation for the supposed benefit of the South; a party that has itself cut loose from the principles of the party of twenty-five years ago; a party that for sixteen years had but one candidate for President, and that man was Bryan; a party that perhaps, has a purpose, but no plan.

I ally myself with a party that has some constructive policy; a party that will give to business what is justly due; a party that stands for the interest of the wage earner in protecting his capital; a party that can offer this year a dozen good men, any one of whom would make a suitable candidate for President; a party that stands for the honor of the flag, each star of which is a constellation, each stripe of white a clear, straight path of duty, each stripe off red showing at what cost the flag was purchased and at what cost it will be defended.

If the Administration and the party do not soon find themselves, thousands of others, with saddened hearts will say farewell, and the time will soon come, when

"The air is full of farewells to the dying
And mourning for the dead."

HIGH SCHOOL COURSE IN HOUSEHOLD ARTS

Bellefonte School Board Reorganizes Courses.

A MODERNIZED SYSTEM

Teacher Specially Trained in Community Service Will be Secured and Equipment Installed for Instruction of Girls.

(The following very interesting and instructive article was written by Professor Jonas E. Wagner, Principal of the Bellefonte Schools)

There are many people today who believe that the traditional course of study that is usually given in the typical high school, falls far short of furnishing those elements of training that the average girl will most need in life. Such a belief is especially fostered when it is known that about ninety per cent of the girls will become identified in one relation or another with the home as their life career. If homemaking, then, becomes the chief interest of the great majority of women, the question naturally arises, is the public school system doing as much as it might to give the girls a form of training that will function to the greatest advantage in their after lives? The answer seems decidedly in the negative.

It may well be asked to what extent does geometry, one of the stand-bys of the past, furnish a girl with that type of education that will help to solve some of the household problems that she is bound to face. Does any one believe that two or three years spent on algebra will mean more to the average girl than the same amount of time and energy spent on learning the art of preparing food that is both appetizing and nourishing, and has been economically purchased? Or, will any one grant that a superficial knowledge of foreign languages, such as the average high school girl must be content to have, means more to her than a knowledge of furnishing a home with taste, or the understanding to a degree of how to care for the young life that may bless her home some day?

Such problems as these are constantly facing a school board for solution. In common with many organizations of like nature in other sections, the school board of Bellefonte has aimed to keep in the forefront of educational advance by noting the significant trends in public school education of the day. The most recent action of the board illustrates this attitude. At a special meeting held a few weeks ago, negotiations were made with the Vocational Bureau of the State Department of Public Instruction to establish a thorough course in household arts, or the art of homemaking. Such a course has now been arranged, and will be offered to the girls who enter the high school next September. The character of the course may be noted from the following outline, the figures indicating the periods a week given to the different subjects:

First Year		Second Year
English	5	English	5
Ancient History	5	Modern History	5
Drawing-Design	2	Drawing-Design	2
Cooking	5	Cooking	5
Sewing	5	Sewing	3
First Aid	2	Laundry Science	2
Sanitation	1	Household acc'ts.	1
		Marketing	1
		Personal Hygiene	1
		Serving	1
Third Year		Fourth Year
English	5	English	5
Elective	5	Elective	5
Drawing-Design	2	Chemistry	5
Cooking	3	Sewing	3
Sewing	3	Care of children	1
Millinery	3	Bacteriology	3
Househ'd M'ng.	2

It will be noted that in each of the four years of the course, provision is made that about two-fifths of the time shall be given to the so-called academic subjects, while the remaining portion is to confine itself to the practical subjects pertaining to the home.

It may be stated that the equipment and requirements will be of a very high standard, as the State will assume a great part of the additional cost, provided certain regulations are complied with. The school board has entered into an agreement to carry out the requirements as formulated. A teacher specially trained for such work and one of approved experience in community service, will be secured to take charge of the new department.

While provision of the character just noted has been made for the girls who desire such training, it will be opportune to state that the other courses are also in process of revision. The General course will follow the lines of the traditional academic program, which aims through the stressing of such subjects as Latin, German, history, science and the mathematics to furnish the elements of a so-called cultural training. The pursuance of this schedule will give a general preparation for life, or for college. Next year this course will be liberalized to such an extent that subjects such as geometry will be made elective. The Commercial course will also be strengthened, and will aim to furnish such training as will meet the demands of the clerical positions available to pupils of the best high schools.

Hence it is believed by the school board that practically every provision has been made for the administration of high school courses of such a diversified character as will meet the most exacting demands of an up-to-date community.

BOY MEETS DEATH IN COASTING ACCIDENT

Robert Bates, of Stormstown, is Fatally Injured.

CRASHED AGAINST TREE

Injured Internally and Leg Fractured—Death on Friday Afternoon Relieved Sufferings Several Hours After Accident.

Robert, the 17 years old son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Bates, of Stormstown, met with a coasting accident last Friday which resulted in his death a few hours later. With another boy he was coasting down a steep hill, lying flat on his stomach on the sled as most boys do, and in trying to steer his sled through a gap in a fence partially lost control and crashed into a walnut tree. His left shoulder and body received the greater force of the shock, although the young man's face and head were scratched and bruised. He was injured internally and one leg was fractured. The accident happened about 11.30 o'clock in the morning and after lingering until 4 o'clock in the afternoon the boy passed away.

Funeral services were held at Stormstown on Sunday and were largely attended. On Monday morning the body was removed to Philipsburg, where interment was made. The sympathy of many friends is with the bereaved family.

Clearfield Boy a Suicide.

Because of a "grievous fault," to which he referred in a note written just before he died, Earl C. Flegal, the 18 year-old son of a prominent family in Clearfield, committed suicide in his room at a Philadelphia hotel last Friday. The following note was found pinned to a pillow close to the body:

"To whom it may concern: I, Earl C. Flegal, do hereby declare that through my own grievous fault I have taken th only way I can see out of my difficulties without dishonor to myself and house. I suddenly find myself unable to meet my hotel bill."

What the grievous fault was to which he referred is not known, although it is supposed that he was disappointed when he tried to enlist in the regular army and was rejected owing to his being below the required height.

Miss Potifer's Pomeranian

It Converted a Dog Hater

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Dr. Thornby was thirty years old and a bachelor. His practice took up all his time during the day, and when he reached his rooms in the evening, sometimes late, he was too tired to go out to seek amusement. Perhaps his case was no different from other men who are regularly occupied with making a living, perhaps he had reached an age when a home with no one in it to cherish first begins to seem lonely, perhaps nature, having been cheated out of her rights, had begun to rebel. Be this as it may, when Dr. Thornby went into his rooms one evening after an anxious day over a very sick patient he longed for some one to comfort him.

The next day after the doctor had finished with his morning office consultation, exerting himself to put the best face on conditions that looked dark indeed and having swallowed a hasty lunch, he went to where his car was standing and, tossing in his bag of medicines and medical implements, got into the car himself. A little dog bounded in behind him and sought a warm place in his lap.

The doctor's mind was upon a very sick patient, and the little stranger was by no means welcome.

"Where did it come from?" asked Dr. Thornby as he pointed to the fluffy bundle of animation.

James, the chauffeur, turned a casual eye on the black Pomeranian who was licking the doctor's glove with a tiny red velvet tongue.

"I couldn't say, sir. I never noticed it until you spoke."

The doctor looked up and down the street in search of some foolish woman who might be the owner of the lapdog, but the street was deserted.

"I'll take him to the pound," said the doctor absently and immediately forgot all about the Pomeranian, which nestled down in the bearskin robe until all one could distinguish was a pair of sparkling eyes.

Dr. Thornby detested small dogs, especially when they were carried by women, and he was supposed to be a woman hater, which in a way was not at all detrimental to his practice, for the fair sex rather liked his brusque manner, even when he told them that they must battle with their disordered nerves all alone with the weapons of plenty of fresh air and exercise and exertion of undiscovered forces of will power.

In spite of this very excellent advice they flocked to Dr. Thornby, and some of them professed to enjoy his look of disapproval when they brought their toy dogs along.

Two days later Dr. Thornby was still in possession of the little Pomeranian of which he had grown very fond. "I shall keep him, James, unless I find the owner," explained the doctor, and he hesitated to add that he had not yet advertised that he had found the dog.

That very afternoon, when he consulted his tablets, he found that an urgent call had come from 83 Cinnamon terrace. He had several patients in aristocratic Cinnamon terrace, but he did not recall the name of Potifer.

No. 83 was a long, low, homelike residence, and when he rang the bell it was immediately answered by a smart Japanese butler.

"I am Dr. Thornby," said the physician.

"Ah, excuse, sir; come this way, please. It is Miss Potifer who is so ill."

The man led the way to an upper sitting room, where the doctor was greeted by Mrs. Potifer, a very stout, amiable looking woman, who confessed to being much worried over her daughter's condition.

"Florence has never had a day's illness in her life," said Mrs. Potifer, "and it doesn't seem possible that her nerves should give way all at once."

"Nerves!" groaned the doctor. "More nerves!"

Mrs. Potifer opened a white door and introduced Dr. Thornby to a lovely young woman, who was reclining on a couch in a charming pink and white boudoir.

There was a strong odor of cologne water in the room, and Miss Potifer's beautiful brown eyes gave evidence of recent tears.

"I never felt better in my life, doctor," wailed Florence Potifer, as the handsome young physician sat down beside her. "I never felt better in my life at the moment when he disappeared."

"My daughter has suffered a great sorrow," put in Mrs. Potifer feelingly.

"I am very sorry indeed," said the doctor, experiencing a vague jealousy of the man whose disappearance had caused such sorrow in one so young and lovely.

Florence Potifer sobbed softly into a lace trimmed handkerchief and permitted the doctor to feel her pulse.

"He was worth five hundred dollars," remarked Mrs. Potifer.

"He couldn't have been much of a catch," thought Thornby as he puzzled his brows over Miss Potifer's lack of symptoms. "I've got a pretty fat bank account myself."

"It wasn't the money," murmured Florence, "but he was so dear, so sweet."

Dr. Thornby blushed.

"How did he disappear?" he asked gently.

"I am afraid somebody has stolen him. I took him for a walk day before yesterday, and all at once he left me. I've never seen him since."

Dr. Thornby left a soothing draft, recommended that the patient sleep with plenty of fresh air in her room and to endeavor to forget her grief for the night. He said that by morning she would feel much better and would be able to pursue the search for her missing friend.

"A friend indeed!" gushed Mrs. Potifer. "Florence loved Peepie Winks almost to death."

"Good heavens!" ejaculated the doctor as he drove away. "Imagine a lovely girl like that falling in love with a man named Peepie Winks!"

During the remainder of the day Dr. Thornby, the woman hater, could not forget the lovely, grief stricken countenance of Florence Potifer.

In the evening while he snatched a few hours of leisure in his study he was still thinking of her. The little black Pomeranian was curled in his lap, for he had won himself a way right into the doctor's heart. And the doctor was shamelessly planning not to advertise the dog at all.

The little dog was licking his new master's hand, and the doctor was thinking of Miss Potifer and the mysterious disappearance of her friend.

Suddenly he laughed aloud as he remembered the ridiculous name.

"Peepie Winks!" he cried scoffingly.

To his amazement, the little dog jumped up and barked frantically. He ran to the door and whined and scratched.

"By jove, I believe he recognized that name," thought the physician. "I'll try him again."

"Peepie Winks!" he called sharply and the dog came bounding back again, exhibiting every evidence of delight at the sound of the name.

"I'll be hanged if I don't believe this dog belongs to that Winks chap," muttered the doctor. "No harm in taking him around to the Potifers in the morning. Miss Potifer might tell me where to find his owner—but of course she couldn't do that—the fellow's lost himself. Imagine losing oneself from a perfect creature like Miss Potifer!"

All of which goes to show that all the doctor's pet aversions were tottering.

The next morning he drove up to Cinnamon terrace with a queer fluttering in the region of his heart.

Under his arm was tucked the silky form of the Pomeranian doggie. As he passed up the walk the dog wriggled to get free, but the doctor had grown too fond of the little fellow to part with him so easily, and so when he was finally shown into Miss Potifer's presence the dog was clutched to his bosom.

Miss Potifer was looking brighter, and she smiled charmingly to the physician, but when she heard a short, joyous bark from the little black dog she arose from her sofa and flew with outstretched arms to meet him.

"Oh, my darling, darling Peepie Winks!" she cried as she took the dog in her arms. "Did oo run away from oo missy? And did de bestest doctor find ums ittle Peepie Winks for he missy?"

Dr. Thornby felt no disgust when he heard these words of endearment fall from the red lips of Florence Potifer. Indeed, he looked very much as if he envied that fortunate canine.

"Now, tell me where you found my darling," cried Miss Potifer, who had recovered with astonishing speed. Her cheeks were pink and her eyes were shining like twin stars.

In a few words Dr. Thornby related how he had discovered Peepie Winks nestled among the bearskins in his limousine and how he had fallen in love with the silky mite.

"And when you heard us tell about losing Peepie Winks I suppose you thought of my darling at once," said Florence.

The doctor blushed.

"To tell the truth, Miss Potifer, when your mother spoke about losing some friend called 'Peepie Winks' I really believed it to be the name of a man."

"A man?" Then the doctor discovered that Florence Potifer had the most joyous laugh he had ever listened to. Presently he joined her, and then Mrs. Potifer came in to hear the wonderful story of how Peepie Winks had been recovered by the doctor.

"I shall miss the little rascal," said the doctor as he took leave of his fully recovered patient.

"You must come and see him once in awhile," said Mrs. Potifer cordially.

A few days afterward Dr. Thornby confessed to himself with some confusion that he sorely missed the pleasant companionship of little Peepie Winks.

"I believe I'll go and see the little beggar," he said after he had completed his calls.

So once again he called at No. 83 Cinnamon terrace, and this time he was shown into the drawing room, where Miss Potifer was making tea for herself and feeding little cakes to greedy Peepie Winks.

That was only the beginning of many calls at Cinnamon terrace, for the acquaintance brought about by the disappearance of Peepie Winks ripened into a friendship, and the friendship warmed into love.

"I hear you are a woman hater and that you detest toy dogs," protested Florence demurely when the doctor confessed his love. "I am afraid to marry you. You might be unkind to my darling Peepie Winks—unless you've changed your mind."

Dr. Thornby took her hands in his and looked into her glad eyes.

"Perhaps I haven't changed my mind, dear; but, you see, there's only one girl in the whole world just like you, and that's you, and there's only only one dog in the world like Peepie Winks. So I'll keep to my opinions—and keep you both in the bargain."

SOCIAL LIONS.

A Bit of History Showing How the Term Came Into Use.

When you refer to a popular man in society as a "social lion" did you know that you are drawing on a bit of very remote history for the expression? The lion is anything but a social beast, and the figurative use of his name to designate a popular person came down to us in a most curious and roundabout way.

When Henry III. came to the throne of England, in 1216, there was a curious dispute as to the significance of the figures entering into the armorial bearings of Great Britain. There were three animals, "passant gardant," and they were spoken of as leopards. As a matter of fact, they were supposed to be lions. It was argued that there had been three leopards in the Tower of London in the reign of William the Conqueror and that these had given the motif for the emblem. Or it might have been that the Norman oppressor kept three leopards as a concession to the Saxons he had subjugated.

Whatever the facts may be, Henry was satisfied that the conventionalized animals on seals, banners and colas were really lions, and in order to impress the fact he had three live and unmistakable "monarchs of the desert" brought to London and placed in the Tower. It at once became the fashion to visit the lions. When guests from out of the city were being entertained the great treat was that of a visit to the "lions of the Tower." After the sight had become commonplace and the meaning of the animals had been lost to sight the phrase remained. The "lion" was a statesman, actor or some other celebrity who held popular favor. —St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

FOOLS THE COWS.

Dead Nettle Is Harmless, but Makes Itself Look Dangerous.

In this case the joke's on the cow. She's fooled into the belief that this little, harmless plant will bite her. The plant helps with the joke by masquerading as a dangerous weed, with real teeth, whereas it wouldn't hurt a flea. This plant is the dead nettle.

One of its cousins, the stinging nettle, covers itself with sharp, poisonous hairs. The cow has learned to avoid the weed. So the dead nettle makes up to look like its cousin, and the cow leaves it alone.

The dead nettle grows in waste places all over eastern United States. It isn't as useful as its near relative in the East Indies and in China, called ramie. This relative also is harmless and plays similar jokes on Chinese cows and other grazing animals.

But ramie furnishes a vegetable fiber which is stronger than hemp, as fine and shiny as silk. It is used in making cordage and nets, and paper made from it is used for banknotes.

So when the ramie imitates the stinging nettle it is protecting itself from grazing animals so it may grow into money.—Philadelphia North American.

Weighing the Mayor.

A mayor, particularly an English mayor, is traditionally a man of weight and substance, but there is only one municipality that insists that his honor get on the public scales and prove it. Of the thousands of quaint and curious customs still surviving in England this is perhaps one of the most odd. The mayor of High Wycombe has to be weighed on Nov. 9 of each year, inauguration day, and this custom has been observed for about six centuries. The mayor elect walks at the head of a procession consisting of the councilors, the beadle and the mace bearer. He is clad in cocked hat, silk stockings, blue coat and knee breeches. Upon reaching the town hall the mayor is placed upon the scales by the head constable, and a record of his avoirdupois is solemnly made in a book kept for this purpose.

A Snoring Child.

Snoring is a symptom that should not be neglected in children. It shows that there is some obstruction to the free passage of air from the nose to the throat. The tonsils may be enlarged and so partially close the passage at its lower opening. There may be a polypus or some small tumor in the nasal passage itself or catarrh of the throat or nose or both. A physician should be consulted.

Velocity of the Earth.

The velocity of the earth on its own axis exceeds, it is estimated, 1,000 miles an hour. The velocity of the earth around the sun is calculated to be 66,000 miles an hour, and the velocity of the moon is calculated to be 2,273 miles an hour.

Squelching the Grouch.

"Samanthy, why don't you stop Mary Anne from giggling?"

"Oh, let her giggle while she can. She'll marry some day if she lives, and, heaven knows, she'll quit the habit mighty quick."—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

BELLEFONTE WANTS TO KNOW

The Answer is Found in the Statement of a Bellefonte Resident.

From week to week, from year to year, there have been appearing in these columns statements made by neighbors, which we have all read with great interest and many of us with great profit. But what we want to know is, do they stand the greatest test of all—the test of time? Here is conclusive evidence on this point from a Bellefonte man:

Mrs. J. C. Johnson, 365 E. Bishop St., Bellefonte, says: "I suffered from backache and pains across my loins and I could hardly get about the house. Dizzy spells came over me and I nearly fell. I was restless at night and my kidneys caused me a lot of annoyance. Two boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills, which I got at Green's Pharmacy Co., did me more good than anything else. The backache and pains disappeared and my kidneys became normal. I now feel better in every way as Doan's Kidney Pills certainly cured me." (Statement given October 21, 1907)

Over Six Years Later, Mrs. Johnson said: "The cure Doan's Kidney Pills made for me some time ago has been permanent."

A Story of Medieval Art

By ETHEL HOLMES

Satan, while always sowing, reaps by periods. Every now and again the world is astonished at some new outbreak of evil—not the ordinary criminality that is always with us, confined largely to those who are born to crime, but a harvest of villainy among those who are supposed to stand for morality.

An epidemic of crime settled upon Italy during the middle ages which pertained more especially to the very highest classes. It became the custom to eliminate one's enemy or such as stood in one's way by poison. Scientists instead of devoting themselves to interpreting the secrets of nature with a view to preserving life used their talents to discover means of producing death. Persons in authority instead of trying to benefit those under their sway sought the means of secretly putting out of the way those who opposed them.

The city of Florence, then in the province of Tuscany, has always been the home of art. A young man in Pisa, Giovanni Tolci, having shown marvelous artistic talents, removed to Florence to get the benefit of the masters and the works of art to be found in that city. So rapid was his progress and so great became his fame that he received a commission from the pope to paint an altar piece.

During Giovanni Tolci's stay in Florence, while loitering one evening on the banks of the Arno, he saw a girl on one of the bridges looking down into the river. Going on to the bridge, Giovanni stood near her and saw that she was looking at the mild Italian heavens reflected in the water. From her rapt appearance he surmised that she possessed that artistic temperament which was in himself. He was seized with a desire to know her and, inquiring who she was, secured an introduction.

Bianca Cellini was not an artist herself, but art was so natural to her that she was of inestimable benefit to Giovanni. She was able to warn him when he was entering upon false ground and to encourage him when he struck that which promised well. So keen was her artistic sense that he came to rely upon her entirely and would not trust his work until she had criticised it.

Bianca came to love the man in whose career she was interested. As for Giovanni, he was absorbed in his work. If he loved Bianca he was not aware of it, though there was a vague feeling within him that she was necessary to him as a companion as well as a critic.

When his altar piece was finished he left Florence with it to take it to Rome. On parting with Bianca he said to her:

"Whatever success I have made in this picture I owe to you. If it brings me fame you are entitled to share it with me. There is no way by which you can do that so well as becoming my wife. That you shall be whenever you choose."

"You owe me nothing, Giovanni," was the reply. "If I have guided you on right artistic paths it has been with the greatest ease. I have had simply to see with my eyes and speak with my voice."

Giovanni, not considering that his cold offer was unlikely to draw any different reply, was much disappointed in it. It is possible that it revealed to him that his heart was in Bianca's possession. At any rate, he went to Rome wishing that she had accepted his offer.

His altar piece was accepted by the pope and when set up in the church for which it had been created was much admired. The new artistic star that had arisen was much courted. At times when he was surrounded by flatterers Bianca was forgotten, but as soon as he was alone she resumed her accustomed place in his mind, and he remembered that it was largely due to her he was enjoying this triumph.

At this time the Borgias were prominent in Rome. Signora Beatrici Borgia, who had married in the celebrated Borgia family, hearing of the fame of the Florentine artist, expressed a desire to see him. She was a very ambitious woman, one who possessed great power over men and who achieved her ends by bringing them under her sway. It occurred to her to make a conquest of this shining light. Why she desired to do so is not clear; but, judging from her character, it is probable that it was simply the eclat the domination of a famous man would give her.

Signora Borgia sent for Giovanni Tolci and commissioned him to paint her portrait. During the sittings she was dressed in the most becoming costumes that could be devised. She was as beautiful as she was unscrupulous and strove to dominate the artist through his senses. While he was at work he kept her talking in order to bring out an animated expression. She contrived to turn the conversation upon what interested him, for she was desirous to learn if his heart was preoccupied.

It was not long before she got the story of Bianca. Giovanni, who was not yet conscious of the fact that Bianca possessed his whole heart, spoke only of what he owed her as a counselor, but the wily signora knew more about what he really felt than he did himself. Since he dwelt continually on the little Florentine girl and would talk of no one else Signora Borgia was not long in inferring that he loved her.

All the art the temptress possessed, all the flattery, the appeals to the senses, seemed to elicit but little response from the artist. The last named appeal was the strongest, but its effect was only temporary. She prolonged the sittings by requiring him to do over certain features, but even with this advantage she knew before the picture was finished that the Florentine girl was keeping from her the man she wished to conquer.

When nothing more seemed to be done to the portrait Signora Borgia said to the artist:

"This girl to whom you owe so much should share the triumph you are sure to make in this portrait. I am going to send for her to come to Rome to visit me, that she may enjoy your success."

Giovanni, who had arranged with the pope for a mural decoration that would take him at least a year to finish, eager to see again the girl who by this time he realized was necessary to him, gladly fell in with the plan. He sent a letter to Bianca with the one dispatched by the signora, assuring her of the change there was in him since he had left her and begging her to accept the invitation. Indeed, he wrote a genuine love letter.

Bianca, who was desirous to learn more of the woman whose portrait her lover was painting, wrote that she would come to Rome, but would feel bound to visit an aunt living there who had long ago given her a standing invitation. Signora Borgia insisted that when Bianca came she must sup at her palazzo with her and Giovanni.

Bianca went to Rome and a few days after her arrival went with Giovanni in the evening to the palazzo of Signora Beatrici to supper. If the artist had given away his feelings for Bianca in her absence he certainly confirmed the matter in her presence. His love was apparent as the sun in heaven.

There seems to be a sixth sense in women that enables them to discern antagonism from members of their own sex. Signora Borgia made a great ado over Bianca, expressing herself as delighted with her and folding her in an embrace. Giovanni, however, noticed a tremor pass over his beloved, and when released from her hostess' arms she was deadly pale. But she soon recovered herself and seemed to be trying to show her appreciation of her reception. When her wraps had been laid aside supper was announced, and the three went into the room where it was laid.

For an hour they continued to partake of a sumptuous repast. The signora pressed her guest to partake of her wines, of which there was a great variety, saying: "Try this; it came from Sorrento and is considered very fine. Here is some from Frascati. Perhaps you will prefer it to the other. This muscatel is delicious." In this way she endeavored to persuade her guests to drink. Bianca sipped the first glass handed her, and nothing could induce her to touch another. She also gave an appealing glance to her lover, which served its purpose, for when the signora placed a glass before him he simply wet his lips with the wine.

Toward the end of the meal the hostess reached for a dish of figs on the center of the table and handed one to each of her guests. Bianca noticed that when the signora handed her a fig she selected it carefully from the dish. Bianca took it and noticed a tiny mark on it so near the color of the fig as scarcely to be distinguished. She left the fruit on her plate without touching it.

"Do you not like figs?" asked the signora.

"I do not care especially for them," was the reply.

Giovanni had broken his fig open and handed it to his sweetheart, saying:

"Try mine, and I will eat yours."

Bianca clapped her hand on the fig on her plate, uttering at the same time a cry. The hostess looked at her as if in astonishment and said:

"Give it to me. I will eat it."

Bianca held it in her clinched hand. "No," she said; "I will take it home and eat it there."

The signora changed from leopardess to lion.

"Give it to me!" she cried imperiously.

Bianca clutched it all the tighter. The signora strove to take it from her. Bianca begged Giovanni to take and keep it. He did so, and the three stood surveying one another with blanched faces and flaming eyes.

The signora ran into another room. Bianca made for an exit, followed by her lover, and when their hostess returned to the supper room with a stiletto they had vanished.

"What does it all mean?" asked Giovanni of Bianca.

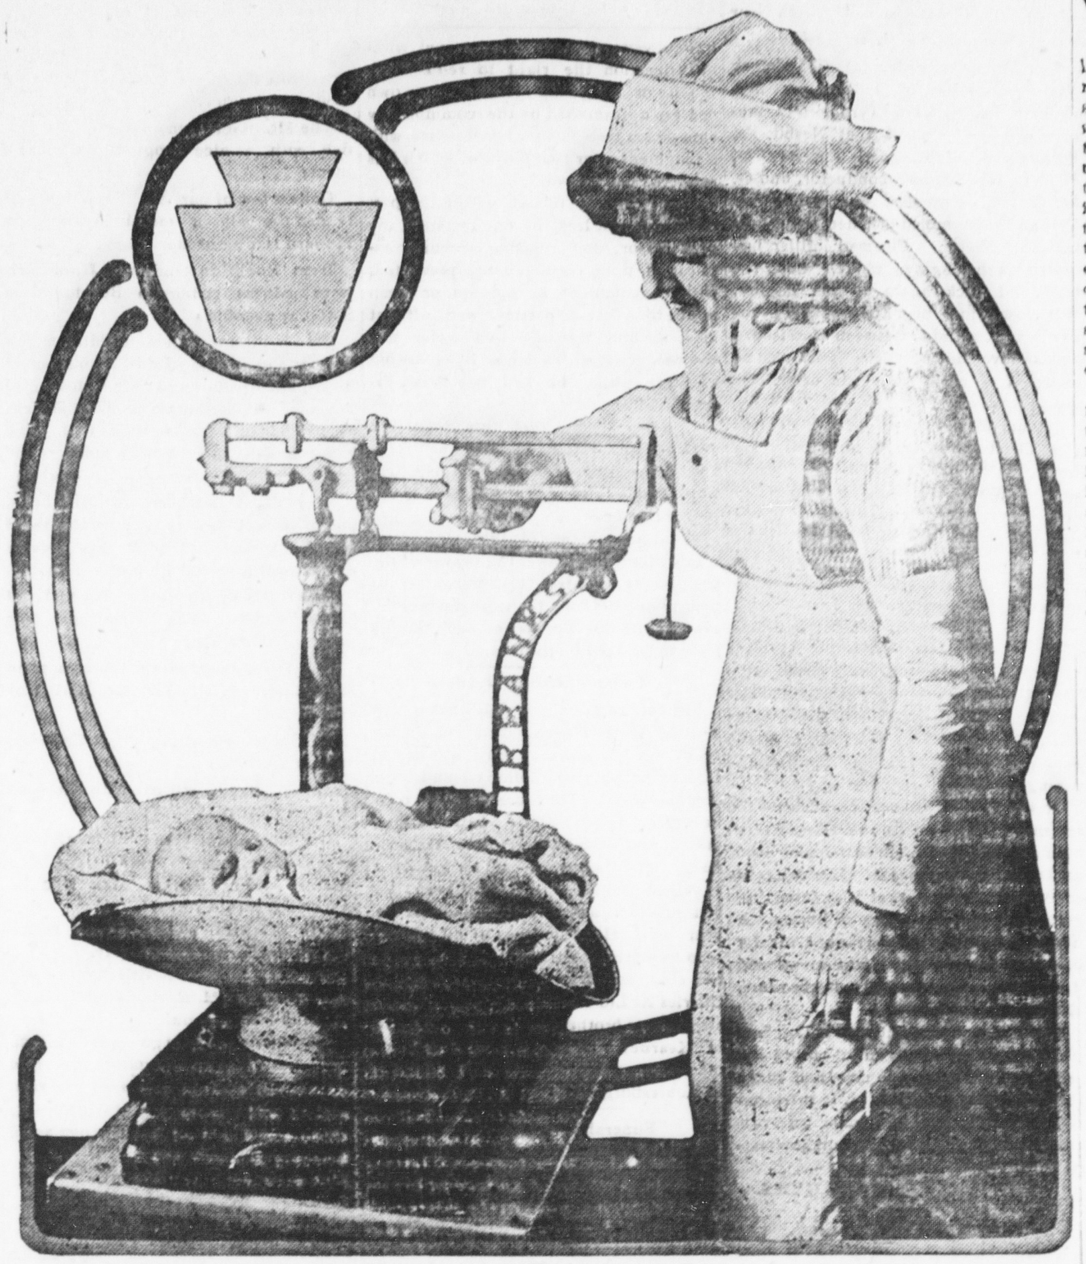
"The fig is poisoned."

And so it proved on applying a test. Signora Borgia was too powerful to warrant an accusation. Giovanni and Bianca returned at once to Florence. He claimed that a swollen wrist would prevent his doing the mural work ordered by the pope and refused to return to Rome.

Of course this refusal was not to be maintained if the pope chose to enforce the order. The holy father would not have done so had not Signora Borgia circulated a report that the swollen wrist was a mere pretext to avoid returning to Rome. This report coming to the pope's ears, he ordered Giovanni to return on pain of incurring the displeasure of the head of the church. In Rome he would be examined by a physician and if his wrist was in a condition to prevent his using a brush he would be excused.

When Giovanni received this new order he bethought himself how to evade it. Signora Borgia's attempt to poison his sweetheart would not be accepted as a reason for defying the head of the church. He purposely wrenched his wrist so that it would require months to heal. Then he went to Rome, was examined and excused.

WHAT BABY'S WEIGHT MEANS

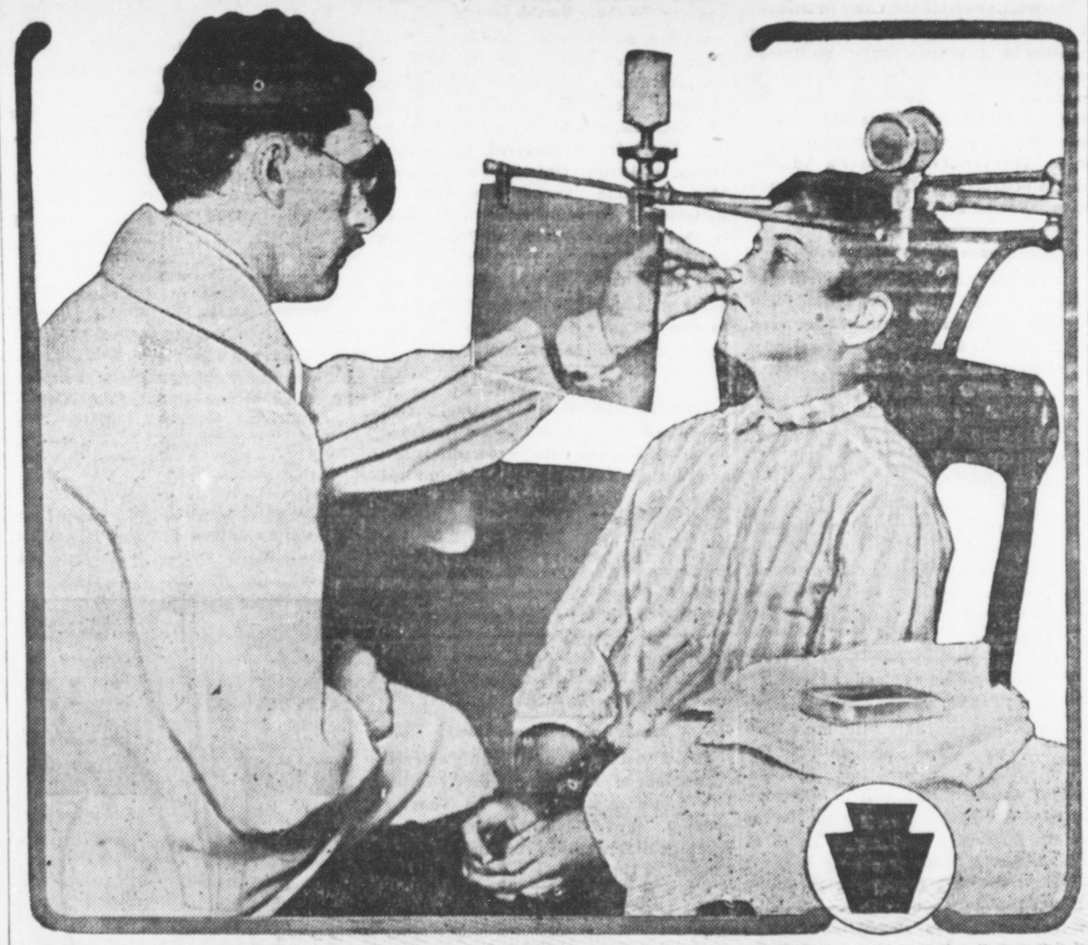


It is a matter of vital interest whether an infant is receiving sufficient nourishment. The first few months of existence have an important bearing on the rest of its life.

There is but one way to tell this and that is by weighing the baby at regular intervals. Many babies lose slightly in weight the first two weeks after they are born, but from that time on, if their food is agreeing with them, they should gain from four to seven ounces a week. If the gain is less than an ounce a week or the baby does not increase in weight at all the family doctor should be at once consulted.

Among the ten thousand patients at the State Dispensaries there are numerous mothers. The nurses have been instructed by Dr. Samuel G. Dixon, Commissioner of Health, to give particular supervision to the children in order that they may not begin life handicapped for want of the proper foodstuffs to nourish their bodies and make them strong and able to fight off tuberculosis.

SAFETY AMID DANGER



Numerous inquiries are received at the State Department of Health asking whether it is dangerous to visit the State Tuberculosis Sanatoria at Mont Alto, Cresson or Hamburg, where more than two thousand citizens of the State who are suffering from this disease, are continually under treatment.

The question is also asked whether the nurses and doctors who are on duty in these institutions do not run a serious risk in performing their work. Perhaps the best and briefest answer to this question would be to say that the great insurance companies of the country do not exact any additional premium from the doctors and nurses who are employed in these institutions. Despite the fact that they are continually coming in contact with sufferers from tuberculosis, their occupation is not regarded as extra hazardous. This is due to the fact that by training, both doctors and nurses have learned to observe every care.

In the above picture a physician at one of the sanatoria is shown examining the nasal passages of a little patient. The piece of plate glass in front permits him to make the examination without running the danger of having the spray from a cough or sneeze strike his face.

This care is observable in all the details of the management of the institution. The dishes are thoroughly sterilized after each use and paper tablecloths and napkins are used, which are destroyed after every meal. By observing these precautions, which have been carefully worked out by Commissioner of Health Samuel G. Dixon, the employees at the State Sanatoria are really in less danger than persons in the ordinary course of life—they are often thrown in contact with sufferers from tuberculosis who do not know how to care for themselves in order to protect others.

CHINESE PORCELAINS.

Wine Cups Like "Tilted Lotus Leaves Floating Down a Stream."

To look long upon Chinese porcelains is likely for numerous causes to result in falling under their persuasive spell. If you are interested in the sculptural stage of art, susceptible to the beauty of line, you will find it there in dignified simplicity. In color the eye is appealed to in a seductive infinity. In range of decorative motives the Celestial potter's mind is fertile with an imagery found only in the east. And there must not be left out of account the interest and satisfaction awaiting the technical student of structure that is found in a substance so quickly responsive to the deft touch of the artisan.

"The fine white bowls surpass hoarfrost and snow" is a Chinese description of one of the ancient fictile fabrics. As the aroma of a delicate wine is enriched and refined by being served in a fragile glass, so the tea drinkers as far back as the days of the Tang, in the seventh and eighth centuries, appreciated their bowls, according as they "enhanced the tint of the infusion." And here comes in another element in the charm of Chinese porcelains. Like the European art of the middle ages and the renaissance, they were so intimately related to life that they contribute to a human and better understanding of a strange and distant people. No sooner is one interested in this truly national art of the Chinese than he finds a certain even if meager knowledge of them a matter of concomitant interest, even though not essential to an appreciation of their creations.

Wine cups of the Tang were likened by their poets to "tilted lotus leaves floating down a stream." There came into porcelain the hue of "rosy dawn." Does one not find here a sympathetic communion with nature in far Cathay? Those so called "ginger jars" of the capriciously named "hawthorn pattern"—the most commonly known of all Chinese porcelains in the occident—were used for sending presents of fine tea at the Chinese New Year anniversary. Their decoration, which has nothing to do with the hawthorn, was made in representation of the blossoms of the winter blooming wild prunus tree lying on streams whose ice covering was disintegrating under the warming influences of the approaching vernal season.—Dana H. Carroll in Scribner's.

MONUMENT TO GENERAL LEE.

The One That Was Discovered In the City of Washington.

Fortunately there is a breezy and refreshing side to political Washington, says a correspondent of the Philadelphia Inquirer. One of the new southern congressmen recently was walking down Pennsylvania avenue with an older southern member, and they stopped in front of a statue of Grant. They admired it for a few moments and later in their walk stopped in front of a statue of Sherman.

"What puzzles me," said the new southern member, "is that here in the capital of the United States there is no monument to Robert E. Lee. The nation is now united, and Lee was one of our greatest men. There should be an impressive monument to him right here in the capital."

"Why, haven't you seen the monument to Lee?" asked the southern congressman. "It is the greatest monument ever erected to any man. I will take you over and show it to you right now."

They walked rapidly for fifteen minutes, and the older southern member showed the newer one the pension building.

Finding Specific Gravity.

The specific gravity of oil may be ascertained by taking a glass vessel and weighing it; then weight into it an ounce of water and mark the point where the water reaches; then fill to this mark with oil and weigh it. Express the weight of the oil as a decimal part of an ounce, which will be the specific gravity of the oil. That of grease may be obtained in the same manner, pouring the melted grease into the vessel.

Treadmills.

Water mills were used in the time of Julius Caesar. In Roman times slaves were condemned to the corn mills, which were propelled by treads. Afterward cattle were used. In the third and fourth centuries there were as many as 300 cattle mills in Rome.

Goldfish.

It may not be generally known that there is cruelty in the keeping of goldfish. Half of such captives die from sheer want of rest. Fish have eyes so formed that they cannot endure the light. In a glass vessel they are in an entirely wrong place, as is evident from the way in which they dash about and go around and around until fairly worn out.

Congressional District, composed of the counties of Clearfield, Centre, Cameron and McKean, subject to the action of the Republicans of the district at the Uniform Primary Election, May 16th, 1916.

We have about come to the conclusion that the groundhog not only saw his shadow but several of them.

Speaking of staging a classy scrap, how about putting Penrose and Brumbaugh in a sixteen foot ring for a bout to the finish. At that, wouldn't it be one way of settling the political scrap in the Republican party in Pennsylvania?

Just sixteen days until the trout season opens. After being low and clear all winter, the streams now are high and muddy. Of course, so long as the water isn't exactly right any fellow easily can explain why he failed to fill his basket.

The Willard—Moran ten round fight in New York last Saturday night was a rather tame and one-sided affair, for Willard and the spectators. Willard and Moran split up something like $75,000, and the promoters pulled down about $50,000. The spectators paid the bill to the tune of $150,000. Of course, they got their money's worth.

State Fish Commissioner Buller seems to be going ahead with his proposed bill to license fishermen. Such a law would create about as much unpopularity as revenue. And it is dollars to doughnuts that the bulk of the revenue thus obtained would be applied to salaries and mighty little to placing more fish in the streams. Once the bill is passed the next step will be to boost salaries and create additional jobs. The people are to be congratulated that the Legislature thus far has not passed a law requiring meters to be attached to our breathing apparatus for the purpose of levying a tax on the air that the good Lord provides.

Practicing At Literature

By ALAN HINSDALE

Wilbur Jones had in him a literary fervor that was seeking an outlet. He met Maud Erskine. It was springtime. They were together in the country with nothing to do. Jones was feeling for a literary career. Persons inoculated with the literary fever usually show the symptoms in verse. Jones, mistaking his literary ebullitions for love, veered between letters and poetry, both addressed to Miss Erskine.

Miss Erskine, not being able to throw an X ray upon Jones' heart, naturally supposed these effusions to be genuine lovemaking. Had Jones not felt them to be such himself they would not have been as commendable as they were.

Miss Erskine was not a beauty, but while Jones was writing verses and love letters to her he considered her at least comely. She sang ballads, and to Jones her voice was melodious.

Jones became separated from her for a period of six months. When they met again he was surprised to see a woman very plain of face and figure, and as to voice, hers was like the wind whistling through telegraph wires, though not so musical. He would not have believed that he could have been infatuated had it not been for the letters and verses. She read some of them to him. They were very good as literary productions; they bespoke genuine love. But it seemed to the author that they must have expressed the love of some one else.

Jones decided that what had been evolved must be permitted to die out as gradually as it had come. He went to another city, wrote Miss Erskine commonplace letters further and further apart and finally stopped writing to her altogether.

Jones' literary attainments became known in the place of his sojourn, and he was pointed out as an author. In order to divest himself entirely of Miss Erskine he adopted a nom de plume and a nom de hide in one. He became Alonzo Poindexter. One who is attempting to hide from a sheriff or a woman is always looking out for discovery. Jones was no exception.

When Miss Philomena Andrews heard that Mr. Jones-Poindexter was an author she secured an introduction.

"Mr. Jones," she said, "why do you authors hide under assumed names?"

"How did you know my name is Jones?" he asked, with suspicion.

"A little bird told me."

Jones got away from her as soon as possible and later asked one of his friends, "Who is Philomena Andrews?"

"She's not Philomena Andrews at all; she's Mrs. Susan Eldredge."

Jones trembled. Could it be that Maud Erskine had objected to being left in the lurch and had sent a detective after him?

Then it was that those letters, those verses he had written to Maud came up to strike him with terror. What excellent evidence against him in a breach of promise suit! He was and had been for some time thoroughly conscious that he had been practicing as a literary producer, but what avail would such an excuse be when his effusions were read to twelve good and true (practical) men? Could he say his productions were simply literary bubbles? And if such a statement were believed would he be considered to have the right to practice for authorship on a girl who could not but take the effusions to be genuine expressions of his love for her? Suppose that he attempted to excuse himself on the ground that the literary fervor within him was so strong that he could not distinguish it from love? He would be laughed at.

One day the so called Philomena Andrews tackled him, saying:

"You might as well confess, Mr. Jones, that you are after me in behalf of Mr. Jenkins, who wrote those love letters to me."

"After you?"

"Yes. But I assure you I will not give up the incriminating effusions. He and I are merely excellent friends. When he began to scribble he asked me to play Beatrice to his Dante. Beatrice was a good wife and mother; so am I. His wife in her jealousy has been ridiculous. I made up my mind to disappear for awhile, hoping that she would come to her senses and the matter would be dropped."

"B-b-but," stammered Jones, "is it usual for literary men to gather inspiration by means of a fancied love?"

"It should be. How would artists get on without models?"

"Just so. I never thought of it in that light."

"Do be sensible. I know you have been employed to get evidence against my friend. Go back and say that you have been convinced that I have been simply his literary model."

"I'll do it. I don't know any one to present your case who is better equipped for the purpose than I."

Jones fixed this matter up satisfactorily, but he did not dare try to dispose of his own affair in the same way. However, on his return he heard that his literary love was engaged to a haberdasher.

This was a great relief to him. He brightened up and straightway resumed an interest in his literary work. But he had made up his mind that if it was safe for Dante to have a Beatrice it is not safe for Jones to have a Maud. But he has made a name by fancying himself in love with a real woman and writing his effusions to an imaginary one.

A CITY OF PALACES.

Havana Looks as Though It Had Been Taken Bodily From Spain.

James Anthony Froude, writing in 1887, said: "Havana is a city of palaces, a city of streets and plazas, of colonnades and towers and churches and monasteries. The Spaniards built as they built in Castile—built with the same material, the white limestone, which they found in the new world. The palaces of the nobles in Havana, the residences of the governor, the convents, the cathedral, are a reproduction of Burgos or Valladolid, as if by some Aladdin's lamp a Castilian city had been taken up and set down unaltered on the shore of the Caribbean sea."

"San Cristobal de la Habana," according to Dr. Jose Maria de la Torre, was the last of the seven cities founded in Cuba by the island's conqueror, the Adelantado Diego Velasquez, and it was located originally near the mouth of the Guines, or Mayabeque river, on the south coast across the island from its present site, on St. Christopher's day, July 25, 1515. By special permission of the pope Nov. 16 is celebrated as the city's natal day instead, in order that the festivities may not conflict with those held on the former date in honor of St. James, who shares the 25th with St. Christopher and who is the patron saint of Spain as well as of the island of Cuba. So the village was named St. Christopher and given the surname Habana because Habana was, according to the Spanish rendition of the Indian word, the name by which the aborigines designated all this section of the island. And today Havana is called "the key to the new world."

If you have never been in Cuba you have missed something. If you were not there fifteen or twenty years ago you missed having the yellow fever at least.—New York Herald.

OUR FIRST STREET LAMP.

It Was Used In Front of John Clifton's House In Philadelphia.

A man who loves to delve in history walked through the brilliantly lighted streets of a city to the public library and spent the evening reading the autobiography of Benjamin Franklin. He was astounded to find therein a description of the first street lamps to be used in Philadelphia, and probably in this country.

Writing of the year 1757, Franklin says:

"It was by a private person, the late Mr. John Clifton, giving a sample of the utility of lamps by placing one at his door, that the people were first impressed with the idea of lighting all the city. The honor of this public benefit has also been ascribed to me, but it belongs truly to that gentleman.

"I did but follow his example and have only some merit to claim respecting the form of our lamps, as differing from the globe lamps we were at first supplied with from London. They were found inconvenient in these respects: They admit no air below; the smoke therefore did not readily go out above, but circulated in the globe, lodged on its inside and soon obstructed the light they were intended to afford, giving besides the daily troubles of wiping them clean, and an accident stroke on one of them would demolish it and render it totally useless.

"I therefore suggested the composing them of four flat panes, with a long funnel above to draw up the smoke, and crevices admitting the air below to facilitate the ascent of the smoke. By this means they were kept clean and did not grow dark in a few hours, as the London lamps do, but continued bright till morning, and an accidental stroke would generally break but a single pane, easily repaired."—Albany Knickerbocker Press.

George Ade Defines Indiana.

In the American Magazine George Ade says:

"Indiana is a composite of steel mills and country clubs, factories and colleges, promoters and professors, stock breeders and Chautauqua attractions, cornfields and campuses. It grows all the crops and propaganda known to the temperate zone.

"If a high wall could be erected to inclose Indiana the state would continue to operate in all departments, but the outsiders would have to scale the wall in order to get their dialect poetry."

An Artist's Criticism.

Probably no two artists ever criticised each other more severely than did Fuseli and Northcote, yet they remained fast friends. At one time Fuseli was looking at Northcote's painting of the angel meeting Balaam and his ass. "How did you like it?" asked Northcote after a long silence. "Northcote," replied Fuseli promptly, "you're an angel at an ass, but an ass at an angel."

PERILS OF GASOLINE.

When Air Mixes With the Vapor, Then Look Out For Trouble.

Fatalities on account of gasoline fires are on the increase, which leads the Journal of the American Medical Association to remark that, "in harmony with experiences respecting human ways and human indifference, the increasing use of gasoline and other liquid fuels which are dangerous because of their ready inflammability will probably increase the number of accidents which cause loss of life as well as great damage to property. Miscellaneous hazards in the use of the inflammable products exist which lead to leakage of these volatile substances and their ignition by spontaneous and unsuspected methods, as well as those due to obvious carelessness.

"A feature, however, which is not readily comprehended and which is a serious source of danger is the fact that gasoline or gasoline vapor burns, but a mixture of the vapor and air is highly explosive." The bureau of mines in a technical paper by G. A. Burrell illustrates the situation in these words:

"If one takes the cover off a full pail of tightly inclosed gasoline and applies a match to the surface the gasoline will flare up and burn as long as the gasoline lasts. On the other hand, if one puts a few drops of gasoline in a small tightly inclosed pail, waits a few minutes and then introduces a flame or an electric spark a violent explosion will most likely result. In the first place, the vapor burns as fast as it comes from the gasoline and mixes with the oxygen of the air; in the second, the oil vaporizes in the pail and mixes uniformly with the air in it to form an explosive mixture, and on ignition explodes.

"Consequently, when one hears of a disastrous gasoline explosion one may be sure that it resulted from the mixing of the vapor from the gasoline with air in the proportions necessary to form an explosive mixture.

"The behavior of illuminating gas, which burns quietly when liberated alone, but explodes when a mixture with air is heated, is quite analogous. The public has been slow to appreciate these distinctions, and hence they deserve emphasis.

"At ordinary temperatures air will hold from 5 to 28 per cent of gasoline vapor. As gasoline vapor is about three times as heavy as air, in a room containing a mixture of the vapor with air the vapor is found in largest proportion near the floor. According to the government experts there is needed only a small proportion of gasoline vapor to render air explosive—1.4 cubic feet of the vapor to 97.5 cubic feet of air. One gallon of gasoline can under ideal conditions render 2,100 cubic feet of air explosive.

"A dangerous feature of gasoline vapor is that it may travel a considerable distance from the gasoline and there be ignited, the flash traveling back to the container of the liquid and causing a roaring fire in a few seconds."

LAKE LAHONTAN.

Time Was When It Covered a Large Portion of Nevada.

The large prehistoric lake which flooded a number of the valleys of northwestern Nevada at a very recent geologic date, but has now passed away, was named Lake Lahontan, in honor of Baron Lahontan, one of the early explorers of the headwaters of the Mississippi. The lake covered approximately 8,400 square miles at its greatest expansion, and in its deepest part, the present site of Pyramid lake, it was at least 880 feet deep—that is, its surface stood approximately 500 feet above the present water surface of Pyramid lake.

The ancient lake had no outlet except the one that led straight up, its waters being dissipated entirely by evaporation. A large area a few miles north of Winnemucca is covered with sand dunes formed since the disappearance of Lake Lahontan. The dunes are fully seventy-five feet thick, and their steeper slopes are on the east side, thus indicating that the whole vast field of sand is slowly traveling eastward.

This progress has necessitated a number of changes in the roads in the southern part of Little Humboldt valley during recent years. In some places in this region the telegraph poles have been buried so deeply that they have had to be spliced in order to keep the wires above the crests of the dunes. The sand is of a light creamy yellow color and forms beautifully curved ridges and waves that are covered with a fretwork of wind ripples, and many of these ridges are marked in the most curious manner by the footprints of animals, which form strange hieroglyphics that are sometimes difficult to translate.—Exchange.

Knights Templars.

During the latter half of the eleventh century pilgrims to Jerusalem began to be persecuted by the Turks or Saracens then in possession of the Holy Land. Nine noble knights formed a brotherhood with the object of protecting the pilgrims. The cause spread rapidly over Europe, and the knights grew to legions in number. Vows of chastity, obedience and poverty were taken, and the order, from merely protecting the pilgrims, took upon itself the task of recovering the Holy Land from the grip of the infidels. About 1120 they were given a place in the inclosure of the temple on Mount Moriah, and hence the name Templars, or Knights of the Temple of Solomon.—New York American.

DO SOME DEEP THINKING.

Help Your Mind by Going Into a "Brown Study" Once In Awhile.

"If the 'brown study' were more often cultivated many people would be happier and more clear thinking would be done," says the London Lancet. "It is in such a state that truths dawn suddenly and clearly upon the unclouded intelligence. It is in such a state that mighty actions are conceived, poems born at a stroke and mankind enlightened through the enlightenment of the individual.

"In this state of mind there is such a concentration of mental energy that the body is ignored. The mind, on the other hand, is so working upon the subject which concerns it, is so intent upon its own affairs, that the external world is obliterated, and any bodily discomfort that may have been pre-existing is now negligible and unnoticed."

The Lancet says the relationship between mental activity and the bodily state is not realized with sufficient frequency or with sufficient thoroughness by the European of today. "The average man is too engrossed with his bodily pabulum, and in caring for the needs of the body he neglects the needs of the mind."

Wisdom Teeth.

The wisdom teeth are the two last molar teeth to grow. They come one on each side of the jaw and arrive somewhere between the ages of twenty and twenty-five years. The name is given them because it is supposed that when a person has developed physically and mentally to the point where he has secured these last two teeth he has also arrived at the age of discretion. It does not necessarily mean that one who has cut his wisdom teeth is wise, but that, having lived long enough to grow these, which complete the full set of teeth, the person has passed sufficient actual years that if he has done what he should to fit himself for life he should have come by that time at the age of discretion or wisdom. As a matter of fact, these teeth grow at about the same time in people whether they are wise or not.

"All right, old man," said Jiggers. "Now, run along home and finish up the job, and then I'll talk to you."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

What a Cornet Did

A Story of War In East Prussia

By F. A. MITCHEL

O hark, O hear! How thin and clear
And thinner, clearer, farther going!
O sweet and far from cliff and scar
The horns of Elfland faintly blowing!
Blow, let us hear the purple glens replying;
Blow, bugle; answer, echoes, dying, dying, dying.
—Tennyson.

The killing and maiming of combatants are not all that is terrible in war. When the mailed fist is raised law, which has been the sole arbiter in the affairs of men, hides its face. The general commanding takes his place on the bench. But the general cannot even control his own troops. The victorious trooper frequently becomes a plunderer. When an army invades an enemy country those who have lived securely under the law flee before it as from an engulfing wave. And it matters not whether one is friend or foe, the soldier unrestrained by constant military discipline becomes a wild beast.

Paul Stanislaus, a Russian Pole, early developed a taste for music. When but eighteen years of age, being very poor, in order to make a living he enlisted in the band of a regiment stationed at Warsaw. The instrument he played was the cornet. At this he became so proficient that when the band played in the public gardens he was frequently selected to play a solo.

On one occasion when the band was playing the national hymn at a ceremony attending the reception of the czar Paul led with his cornet. His instrument, accompanied by a hundred other pieces, rang out in such clear and inspiring tones that the emperor's admiration was excited, and he sent the musician a present of 100 rubles.

When Paul Stanislaus left the band he took his instrument with him, and many a time some ceremony was made impressive by his rendition of the national anthem. Then would the Pole forget the dismemberment of his nation or dream of the day when its three parts—Austrian, German and Russian—would be again united under one independent government.

Stanislaus drifted northward and finally married and settled down within the border of East Prussia. There he worked a little farm, but so great a portion of the year was given to winter that there was not much time left in which to grow farm products, and there was little profit.

A family grew up about him. His wife was a good manager and made the most of the scanty income. Little by little, year by year, she added something to the family comforts, and what she and her husband had not money to pay for they made with their own hands. When a child was born to them Paul would add an additional room to his little home, and in time there were six of these additions nestling up against the central building like so many chicks against the mother hen.

Then, too, there were frequent additions to the furniture. Paul was handy with tools, and, though he had never learned the trade, he was no mean cabinetmaker. Now it was a bed, now a crib, or, rather, a bunk for one of his children, now an easy chair, all made out of plain material, but strong and not rough. And as for quilts, the wife was as apt at saving odds and ends for the purpose as patching them together.

In this way the nest grew in size and in comfort, though so slow was the process that it was like the hands of a clock that are not seen to move. Paul and his wife loved their home because they had not received it all finished at the hands of some generous giver, but had made it all themselves through a term of years. As for the children, they loved it for the best reason in the world—because it was home.

There had been when the property was bought a small mortgage on it. From the first the couple put aside a certain sum each year, if it were only 20 rubles ($10), and slowly during a long term of years they had seen the amount they owed becoming smaller. At last it was reduced to 100 rubles, then 50, then 10. When the last 10 rubles were paid the couple invited their intimate friends to sup with them, and when all were ranged around the table Paul took the mortgage document and burned it before them. Then all drank health and prosperity to the happy family who owned their home and everything in it.

Amid the rejoicing a horseman rode up to the door and cried out:

"Are there any reservists here?"

"No. Why do you ask?"

"The kaiser has declared war against Russia, and all reservists of the first line are called to the colors."

The happiness of the Stanislaus family was turned to anxiety. They were Russian Poles living in Germany. The boys were too young for military service, and the father was beyond the age for first line troops. But they lived on the border, on German territory, and the tide of battle was liable to sweep over them.

Day after day spark after spark lit new flames. Russia declared war against Germany. France, as Russia's ally, did the same. Germany hurried across the border into Belgium, which drew England into the fray. All was preparation, while troops were being moved to points for defense or attack. Germany, having hurled its first strength westward, gave the slow moving Russians on the east time to concentrate and take the offensive.

Then came the Russian drive into East Prussia. The army, a vast horde, crossed the line by a route leading directly toward the Stanislaus home. On they came with fire and sword, accompanied by the thunder of their guns.

"We shall be swept away before the hurricane!" cried Stanislaus. "All we have been gathering for so many years will be lost."

"You are a Russian subject," said his wife. "You have been musician in a Russian regiment. Can you not make them understand this?"

"We will be overrun by stragglers and pillagers. They will have no mercy."

One morning the devastating horde reached the Stanislaus home. They were moving to attack the Germans farther within the border. There was no fighting, but one wing of the army passed down a road not a hundred yards from the Polanders' home. A number of men bent on loot, seeing the comfortable looking house, with its additions and a vegetable garden beside it, broke away from the column and scudded along, bending low to the ground so as to escape detection by their officers. The family saw them coming. The father seized a gun, but put it back. The mother fell on her knees and began to pray. The children wrung their hands, and some of them sought places in which to hide. A dozen men entered the house and began to appropriate everything in sight. They were a savage lot, and soon all thought of what they were taking was overtopped by the occupants' fear that they would be murdered.

Stanislaus believed that if he could attract the attention of an officer he might secure protection. He started out for the purpose, but one of the troopers, probably realizing his intention, hurled him back.

Stanislaus' cornet, on which he had played when a member of a Russian military band, hung on the wall over a fireplace. An idea occurred to him for calling for assistance. Seizing the instrument, he began to play the Russian national anthem. Clear and solemn, the beautiful air rang out, passed through the open door, its vibrations sweeping over the land far and near.

At the first notes off came the head covering of every pillager. Then they began to drop such plunder as they held in their hands; then they unloaded their pockets, all the while their heads bowed reverently.

A general riding at the head of his staff reined in his horse and listened. A brass instrument needs distance. It is "thin and clear" when heard from afar, and its harsher tones are softened. The general recognized the hymn of his fatherland. He doffed his hat. His staff followed his example. Men marching in the ranks, hearing the hymn and seeing the general uncovered, took off their hats. When the last notes died away he said:

"There is only one man who can play the hymn as it has been played, that is Paul Stanislaus of the old —th regiment, in which I was once a captain."

Then, turning his horse's head toward the house from which the sounds emanated, he rode thither, followed by his staff.

The looters saw him coming, and by the time he reached the door they were standing at attention before it, dreading his wrath.

"Paul Stanislaus, where are you?"

"Here, general!"

Stanislaus, his cornet in his hand, came out of the house and saluted.

"Do you recognize me?" asked the general.

"No, general."

"I have heard you play that anthem many a time when I was an officer of the —th regiment of the line at War saw and was present when you played it before the czar, and he sent you a gift. As soon as I heard it just now I knew that you were the musician."

"Many years have passed since I was one of the band of the —th general. We have changed."

"Why did you just play it?"

"To call an officer. I need protection."

The general understood and looked at the men who stood trembling before him. He ordered one of his staff to march them away, then dismounted and went into the house. Seeing the confusion, he knew what had occurred. A table, on which were writing materials, stood near, and approaching it he wrote a safeguard which he handed to Stanislaus. Then he asked him to stand in front of the house and play again the Russian hymn.

Stanislaus did as requested, and as regiment after regiment marched past on the road below each burst into song, above which rang the clear tones of the cornet. When the anthem had been repeated again and again the general said to Stanislaus:

"You may be too old to fight, but you are not too old to inspire others to fight by the soul you put into music. Here are a hundred rubles to make up for the ruin done by these pillagers, who, I promise you, shall be severely punished. After you have repaired the damage done by them I desire that you follow the army and join me wherever I may be. You shall be with me at my headquarters, and before we go into battle you shall breathe love of the fatherland into the souls of my men. I as their general am expected to inspire them to deeds of valor, but were I the god of war himself I could not move them as you can move them by the power of song."

While the general was speaking these words Stanislaus and his family stood in respectful attention. When he had finished he put spurs to his horse and rode on.

Then father, mother and children clung to one another in an embrace. Then they all fell on their knees and gave thanks. Then—they began to clean up.

LURING THE FISH.

Just What Kinds of Natural Bait Are the Most Effective.

Natural baits are those which most anglers are accustomed to using. Such baits include worms, frogs, minnows, grasshoppers, grubs, salt pork, crickets and many kind of real fish food.

The most common of all baits is the angleworm, and it is used more than any other because it can be secured so easily. This bait can be used for all kinds of fish and is accepted by large and small alike, no matter whether surface or bottom feeders.

The worms may be used just as they are taken from the ground, and they are generally used in that condition. But if they are dug a week before, washed and fed with a few breadcrumbs soaked in milk they become toughened and make the best bait.

It is a common saying that the big worm will match the big fish. There appears to be little if anything in this, but a worm that is just the right size to cover the hook when properly impaled without crowding is the right size.

The grasshopper is another good bait, especially for surface feeding fish. Perhaps no other bait will cause a lazy old trout to rise so quickly from the depths as will a lively grasshopper.

For black bass and other large fish the minnow is the favorite bait. By "minnow" is meant a small fish, for small fish are invariably called minnows by anglers, regardless of their species.

Small frogs make good bait for all game fish and may be used with a single hook by inserting through the lips, like baiting with a minnow. The dobson, or helgramite, is excellent as bait for many kinds of fish.

Crawfish are common as bait used for still fishing. They are best at the time they have shed their shell and in this condition may be hooked through the body, but at other times should be hooked through the tail. Bass are fond of crawfish. A bait that is quite a favorite for bass is a strip of fat salt pork cut in the shape of the letter V, with the hook through the small end.—New York American.

FLIGHT OF ARETHUSA.

Mythological Origin of a Favorite British Warship Name.

From the days of Drake "Arethusa" has always been the favorite name of a swift, light cruiser in the British navy. A corvet named Arethusa took part in the battle of Cape St. Vincent on Feb. 14, 1797, when Nelson, then under Jervis, defeated the Spanish fleet, and this Arethusa was henceforth with the great admiral down to his last battle at Trafalgar eight years later.

As Arethusas have succeeded one another in the British navy, legends have gathered around the name until the ship so named has seemed to symbolize the mythological origin of the term.

There is in Peloponnesus a river called Morea. In ancient times, it is said, it was presided over by a river god named Alpheus. Alpheus fell in love with the river nymph, Arethusa, and pursued her through the water. Diana, hearing her cries of distress, opened a passage for the stream so that it flowed under the sea to Sicily, where, near Syracuse, Arethusa disappeared in the spray of a beautiful fountain.

The river, untainted by the sea, still flows underground to the fountain, and Alpheus is still said to be searching for the nymph, but never finds her. This is why her naval namesakes have eluded the enemy through all the centuries and have been believed by the superstitious to be invulnerable.—New York Times.

Odor of Sanctity.

The sexton of a suburban church has many stories to tell of the comments made by visitors.

On the occasion of a festival, when the church was beautifully decorated with evergreens and flowers, an old lady walked up the aisle to the chancel and stood sniffing the air after every one had left the church.

"Don't it smell solemn?" she said at last to the sexton, as she turned away with evident reluctance.

"I don't know as I ever realized just what the 'odor of sanctity' meant before today."—Chicago Herald.

Cigars a Century Ago.

The war of 1814 brought the cigar to Paris with the English. Shortly after Waterloo, says the Springfield Republican, Roger de Beauvoir declared: "The cigar is the last word of dandyism, the final detail by which the finished gentlemen of our time may be identified. It is at the same time the supreme elegance and the supreme insolence of our generation. One cannot too highly recommend to would be lions to use it and even to abuse it."

Domestic Dilemma.

"Charley, dear," said young Mrs. Torkins, "would you enlist if your country called you?"

"I don't know what to say. If I answer 'No,' you'll say I don't love my country, and if I answer 'Yes' you'll say I don't like to stay at home."—Washington Star.

Tale of a Lost Engagement Ring

By ETHEL HOLMES

"What do you mean, Clara, by associating with that thief Ralph Cummings? Do you wish to be ostracised by all your friends?"

A singular expression came over Miss Rathbone's face, an expression that cannot be described, though some idea of it may be formed by an understanding of what caused it.

"That thief, as you call him, is my fiance."

"Your fiance?"

"Yes, we will be married next month. I shall acquaint you with the story attending Ralph's being considered a thief, after which you will be able to form an opinion of my reasons for marrying a man so branded. You are my sister and have a right to know them."

"Why may not all the world know them?"

"That you will understand when you have heard the story. When the Tophams gave their house party the episode occurred which branded Ralph as a thief. You were not there; I was. One afternoon all the automobiles on the place were got out, and the whole party was taken on a ride. I wore a short astrakhan jacket with a pocket on each side. Of course we were plentifully supplied with robes. When we returned, before taking off our wraps Alfred Topham asked us into the dining room to 'warm up,' as he expressed it. We all gathered around the sideboard and were warming up when a servant stepped up to Alf and handed him a little box that had come by express during his absence on the auto ride. We all knew that Alf had been attentive to Evelyn Mansfield, and one of the men very indelicately cried out:

"'It's the engagement ring. Let's see it, Alf.'

"Alf opened the box and took out a ring set with a ruby between two diamonds. It was passed from one to another for inspection while the men continued to warm up. We spent some fifteen or twenty minutes in the dining room, and when we were about to separate Alf sang out:

"'Who's got my ring?'

Every one looked at every one else, but no one produced the ring. For a time it was supposed that it would be forthcoming, but since it did not appear Alf's brows began to knit. We all joined in a search for it, on the floor, under the furniture. The ring was not found. The matter began to look serious. Had some one of the guests purloined it? Alf, being host, of course could not suggest such a thing, but his chum, Ned Thurston, presently said:

"I offer myself to be searched, and I daresay that all of you will volunteer for the same thing."

Everybody volunteered except Ralph. He said that he must demur to such a process. We were all supposed to be ladies and gentlemen, and it would be an insult to each and every one of us to search us.

It took the party some time to digest what he had said, but the prevailing opinion was against it. Alf settled the matter by saying that he would rather lose the ring than put an indignity on any guest of his and forbade the search. Nearly every one considered Ralph's objection a virtual admission of guilt. It was believed that he had taken the ring, not foreseeing that he would so soon be caught with it on his person, and was obliged to choose between the course he took and full exposure. He did not wait to receive the cold shoulder, but left during the afternoon.

The blow fell as hard on me as it did on him. I had received nearly all his attention while at the Tophams and the announcement of our engagement was expected before the party broke up. I didn't know what to do or say in the matter, so I took no course whatever, declining to express an opinion. But it was not pleasant for me to remain after what had occurred, and I made an excuse to go away the next day. They were all very [illegible] to [illegible] me to stay [illegible]

FREAKS OF FASHION.

How a Fad For Wearing Ribbons In the Hair Was Started.

Dress experts keep changing the fashions, as it were, in self defense. At one time elaborately worked and hand embroidered blouses were the vogue. Then machines were so perfected that machine embroidered blouses outrivaled the hand work, and fashion experts retaliated by designing blouses as plain as possible.

The fashion for uncurled feathers was the result of a wet day. Curled ostrich feathers were on every hat, when at some fashionable function the rain descended in torrents and every feather was soon absolutely straight. Milliners, always alert for an idea, were struck with the appearance of these feathers, and uncurled ostrich plumes became the demand.

The fashion for wearing ribbons intermingled with curls piled on the top of the head originated in the reign of Louis XIV. of France. A certain Mlle. Fontage was out hunting with the king and court when a branch of a tree caught her hair and pulled it down. With quick resourcefulness she leaned down, pulled off her ribbon garter and twisted up her hair with it. The king, noticing the pretty effect, complimented her on her charming coiffure, and from that moment the "fontage," as it was termed, became the rage.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Early last Saturday evening Miss Ellen Hayes drove her father's large touring car to the front of the Dr. R. G. Hayes residence on North Allegheny Street. She left the car unguarded while she entered her home, and a few minutes later several young men stole it and started toward Lock Haven, supposedly to take in the big basketball game there Saturday night. Dr. Hayes communicated with Chief of Police Dukeman and the car was tracked out Howard Street to Wilson Street and via that route to Bishop Street. The boys may have thought that they were safely on their way to Lock Haven, but they were not familiar with the condition of the roads They were compelled to abandon the machine when at a point just beyond the Beaver farm. Dr. Hayes and Chief of Police Dukeman found the car and brought it back to town. The identity of the offenders was soon established and they admitted the theft. The minimum penalty for such an offense is $100 fine Dr. Hayes finally concluded to allow the five boys to go without prosecution.
